Good morning

I shared the below yesterday.

Do I love that we had tens of thousands of people descending on our city as we were trying to assess and repair the damage from the storm? No, of course not. However, a lot goes behind those decisions and I'm not going to pretend to understand what the university had to consider. The time to revisit how that decision came about and what might be done differently going forward is not now. Today, and in the weeks and months to come, my energy will be focussed on what can be done to repair our neighborhoods and provide for residents in need. Once our community has recovered, we begin the process of reassessing and planning ways to better manage these rare disastrous situations in the future.
